EUROPE'S MEMORIAL LANDSCAPES: SEEING HISTORY

This presentation takes a thorough reflection on diverse relationships between space and memory in the context of landscape and violence. I begin with presenting the concepts of space, place, and non-place.

Then, I direct an attention to the relations between memory and space, which provides explanations of such notions as place, site of memory, and non-site of memory.

I present the basis for these considerations, discussing results of my research on commemorating practices related to Nazi mass violence, and exploring variety of landscape biographies and transformations.
